

Equal treatment

Challenging racism and health inequalities and strengthening self-advocacy and peer support

Easy Read Summary

	This project is about peer support and self-advocacy groups led by or including people with learning disabilities from ethnic minority communities.
	We know people with a learning disability from minority ethnic groups don't get equal access to health care.
	We know some people are treated differently because of racism or prejudice.

This project is to help more people know about their rights to help them get equal treatment.

We want to strengthen self-advocacy groups work with minority ethnic communities

We want to help self-advocacy groups speak up about racism

We want to help community groups work together on tackling health inequalities

Learning Disability England is working in partnership with Race Equality Foundation.

The project is funded by NHS England.

We want an organisation to help us deliver this work

We need them to:

Coproduce and co-deliver training and resources for self-advocacy groups

We want the training:

- To help people understand racism
- To help make self-advocacy more inclusive
- To link with other community groups

The group will train 15 self-advocacy groups using their training

Each group will be asked to write a short action plan for what they will do to include people and stand up for equal treatment

We need them to share what everyone has learnt from being part of the project

This work all needs to be done before 31st May 2022

The group or people who do the work need to:

- Have experience of leading projects like this
- Be led by people with learning disabilities or a partnership where they are equal partners in this work

- Know about the experiences of BAME people with a learning disability
- Know about what helps people get equal treatment or stop racism

The deadline for applying is 1st November 2021 at 5pm

Family and parent carer groups and community organisations are part of this project too
