

Covid-19: Where we are now

On 1 April 2022 the government lifted the last of the Covid restrictions as part of their Living with Covid Plan

This is an update from Learning Disability England on the current guidance.

Guidance

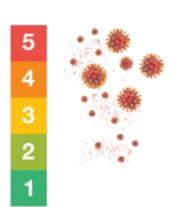

If you are an adult with Covid symptoms, you should try to stay at home and avoid contact with other people until you feel better.

If you do leave home, the government suggests wearing a mask and avoiding crowded spaces.

If you test positive, you should stay at home for five days - and longer if you still feel ill.

Some people are still at high risk from COVID-19

Please see links to the full guidance:

Guidance for people whose immune system means they are at higher risk

Work and School

If you have symptoms or have tested positive, you should try to work from home.

The guidance for people aged 18 and under is:

 If you have a temperature or are unwell you should stay at home if possible – you can go back to school when you are well enough and don't have a temperature

Testing

Free lateral flow tests (LFTs) are no longer generally available to people. Most people with symptoms can no longer get free PCR tests either.

These people can still get free tests:

- NHS staff who care for patients
- hospital patients who need PCRs before treatment
- care home residents
- people working in high-risk settings, including care homes and prisons
- hospital patients who are discharged to care homes or hospices

If you have a health condition that means you can still get free tests, you should be sent tests to use if you have symptoms.

Here is the link to order tests online:

Lateral flow tests can be bought from high street pharmacies for £2 per test.

Support services that are registered with Care Quality Commission (CQC) get free tests. This includes:

- care homes
- homecare organisations
- extra care and supported living services
- adult day care centres
- personal assistants
- shared lives carers
- social workers
